During the next 23 months, from December, 1855, to October, 1857, inclusive, after passing shaft No. 1, the progress was 559 metres, equivalent to 24.30 metres, or 79.70 feet per month, at one face. From the north entrance, the progress in 19 months, from June, 1854, to December, 1855, inclusive, when there seems to have been an interruption in the work, was 339.90 metres, equivalent to 17.89 metres, or 58.68 feet per month, at one face. In the last 10 months, from January to October, 1857, inclusive, the progress was 173.20 metres, equivalent to 17.32 metres, or 56.80 feet per month, at one face. We see here, that the work from the north entrance, which was on a down grade where the water followed the advance, progressed much more slowly than that from the south entrance, where the water could run off. And we also see that the work from the south entrance advanced less rapidly in the last half, than in the first half, of the whole distance. The whole distance executed from the two end faces alone, between June 1, 1854, and October 31, 1857, a period of 41 months, was 1744 metres, being an average of 21.27 metres, or nearly seventy feet per month, at one face. My principal object in making a personal visit to the Hauenstein Tunnel was, to see the effect of the absence of shafts upon the ventilation....
