Disappears. Jos. Gone into viewless air, Into incorporate and empty air, Faded and gone, as all our hopes do fade. And, mother, thou hast entered peace at last, And I have a wee brother. O I wish That I could see him, that I might return; But Leah s cruel children would forbid, And these impenetrable walls forbid. Help me, Jehovah! help, my lathers God, For I have been afflicted wrongfully. And am the son of him whom thou didst bless, Saying, to him and to his children s seed. For dream, or apparation, or the thought Of a diseased mind, this is from Thee, To give me comfort in my loneliness. I lean on Thee. Let Thy good will be done; Except it be done, Thou art not the Lord, And so not my will. Lord, forsake me not. Enter, Jailer. Tail.--How dost thou feel this morning, Joseph? Jos.--With thanks, sir, well. Jail.--Dost thou not feel a little strange? Jos.--Strange? yes, sir. But why dost thou ask such a question? Jail.--Only because--a reason that is no reason. I think what is about to occur sometimes impresses itself on one s mind; that friends at a distance can communicate in soul; that if one thinks or talks about thee, be he never so tar away, thou wilt know it by a certain warming at the heart, itching of the ear, and prickling in the blood--eh? Jos.--Why, I know...
