Excerpt from Shirley, Vol. 2 of 2: A Tale The hour was now that of dusk. A clear air favoured the kindling of the stars. There will be just light enough to show me the way home, said Miss Keeldar, as she prepared to take leave of Caroline at the Rectory garden-door. You must not go alone, Shirley. Fanny shall accompany you. That she shall not. Of what need I be afraid in my own parish. I would walk from Fieldhead to the church any fine midsummer night, three hours later than this, for the mere pleasure of seeing the stars, and the chance of meeting a fairy. But just wait till the crowd is cleared away. Agreed. There are the five Misses Armitage streaming by. Here comes Mrs Sykes's phaeton, Mr Wynne's close carriage, Mrs Birtwhistle's car: I don't wish to go through the ceremony of bidding them all good-bye, so we will step into the garden and take shelter amongst the laburnums for an instant. The rectors, their curates and their churchwardens, now issued from the church-porch. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
